Extension for Adelaide change of frequency

The ABA is proposing to extend the time period within which the Adelaide Foothills translator service of 5SSA Adelaide is required to change its operating frequency. The ABA is proposing to extend the time period by six months, until 31 March 2003.

The ABA's view is contained in its explanatory paper and draft variation to the Adelaide radio licence area plan, released on 22 July 2002 for public comment.

The ABA determined the Adelaide licence area plan on 6 September 2001. It decided to make one additional commercial radio service available two years after the gazettal date of the licence area plan, which was 19 September 2001.

In order to make the additional service available, the 5SSA commercial radio translator service that serves the Adelaide Foothills, was required to change frequency, from 91.1 MHz to 90.3 MHz, within 12 months of gazettal of the licence area plan, that is by 18 September 2002.

On 20 June 2002, Austereo Pty Ltd sought the ABA's permission to extend the date by which the frequency change is required, to 31 March 2003 instead of 18 September 2002.

Given that the ABA does not propose to auction the additional commercial radio licence until after September 2003, the ABA proposes to extend the timeframe for 5SSA to change frequency until 31 March 2003.
