Ten Perth breached code by broadcasting coarse language in a promotion for The OC

ACMA has found that Network Ten Perth Pty Ltd, the licensee of commercial television service NEW Perth, breached the Commercial Television Industry Code of Practice 2004 by broadcasting a promotion for the program, The OC, containing coarse language unsuitable for G time.

On 1 June 2005, the former Australian Broadcasting Authority (ABA) received a complaint about a promotion for the M-classified program, The OC, broadcast by Network Ten Perth on 15 March 2005. The promotion was screened during a G viewing period and the complainant alleged that the promotion contained language unsuitable for this time slot.

ACMA continued the investigation after it took over the role and responsibilities of the ABA from 1 July 2005. The complaint was investigated against clause 2.4 of Section 2 of the Commercial Television Industry Code of Practice 2004.

ACMA determined that the licensee of NEW breached clause 2.4 of the code by failing to broadcast material according to the Television Classification Guidelines covering the level of coarse language permitted in G viewing periods.

The code states that all program promotions broadcast in G time must comply with the G classification requirements in Appendix 4 of the code. These state that very mild coarse language generally considered socially offensive or discriminatory may only be used infrequently when absolutely justified by the story line or program context.

In ACMA's view, the language in the program promotion did not meet these requirements and therefore exceeded what is permitted at this classification.

The licensee accepted the breach finding and has undertaken to distribute the finding to classifiers and program producers and discuss the finding with promotions staff. The finding will also be used as an example in regular code training sessions with staff.

ACMA considers this action addresses the compliance issue raised by the investigation and will continue to monitor the licensee's performance in this regard.

Australian Capital Television breached code

ACMA has found that Australian Capital Television Pty Ltd, the licensee of commercial television service CTC Southern New South Wales, breached the Commercial Television Industry Code of Practice 2004 by broadcasting an episode of Monk which failed to comply with the PG classification guidelines.

On 30 August 2005, ACMA received a complaint about an episode of Monk broadcast by CTC on 11 June 2005. The complainant expressed concern about the violent content in the program.

The licensee admitted that due to a technical error the material containing the violent content was not edited from the episode and was mistakenly broadcast. ACMA determined that the licensee of CTC breached clause 2.4 of the code, by failing to classify material in accordance with Television Classification Guidelines set out in clause 3.1 of Appendix 4, which states the level of violence permitted in material classified PG.

The licensee accepted the breach finding and has rechecked all Monk programs to ensure they are correctly edited and broadcast. The licensee has also brought the classification error to the attention of all relevant staff, including program editors and classifiers.
