

APLA Exchange – can you help?

Obesity treatment

We represent a client who underwent surgery which included the insertion of an Adjustable Silicone Gastric Lap Band for the treatment of obesity. The lap band was inserted laproscopically and had attached to it a reservoir of liquid affixed to tissue above the hip.

The reservoir became loose and subsequently cracked resulting in the need for further surgery to replace the reservoir. Further, the lap band did not result in the expected weight loss. Pre-surgery advice regarding the risks of surgery and the likelihood of success was minimal. The manufacturer of the reservoir is believed to be a Belgian company. We seek an exchange of information with anyone who has conducted a similar claim.

Tropical Disease

We presently act in a Lord Campbell's action brought by the wife of a deceased worker who contracted a rare disease known as Melioidosis apparently obtained from a cut on his hand whilst working. This cut began to swell rapidly and was subsequently ascertained after the husband's death that he had contracted Melioidosis.

We understand that there is case law on this disease particularly in the Northern Territory relating to the foreseeability of a worker becoming interested in the disease. We understand that there have been some Northern Territory Workers' Compensation Claims of persons who have contracted this disease. It appears that the disease is more prevalent in Northern Australia and in tropical and sub-tropical climates.

We would be grateful if you could provide us with any material and/or cases of Workers' Compensation claims for Melioidosis in Australia. Alternatively, we would be grateful if you could provide us with any case law on the foreseeability of risk of injury or of unfamiliar or rare diseases causing injury or loss of life.

Contaminated Tampon

We represent a client who suffered an onset of severe gynaecological symptoms in June 1995. In June 1995 she purchased Libra Fleur Tampons which fell within Batch numbers 4090 to 5128. These batch numbers were subsequently recalled by Sancell due to metal pieces being found under the outer cover of the tampon. We are seeking to establish the nexus between our client's injuries and the defective product. If any members have been involved in similar cases we would be grateful to hear from them.
