

New art award announced

Aboriginal artists to compete for nearly $30 000 in prizes

To mark the International Year for the World's Indigenous People, Sydney's Botany Council, with the support of local commerce and industry, has launched the Botany Aboriginal Art Awards with nearly $30 000 already donated in prizes. Only Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders can enter.

Botany Mayor Ron Hoenig said: 'Botany Bay and Botany are inextricably a part of Australian history. There was a substantial Aboriginal population here before European settlement in 1788. We decided one way of marking the IY-WIP would be to set up these awards, to increase our understanding of, and respect for, Aboriginal culture and heritage.'

The awards have four categories: traditional Aboriginal painting; landscape; portraiture—of an Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander person; and interpretive—subject, 'The Meaning of Mabo', any medium.

Entries must be received by Friday, 3 December and those chosen to be hung will be exhibited shortly after.

The days on which things will happen in the New Year have changed, but the intervals between the key dates for each issue are the same as in previous years. These intervals are the minimum set by the time it takes for each successive production step and are largely out of our control. The cover dates hinge around the Constitution's requirements to give notice to members before the 'Call for Nominations' and the Council elections; they are then calculated to give regular four-weekly intervals between issues throughout inCite's year.
