

I have a dream...

I have a dream. That libraries (the brick and mortar type) all over the world will be situated in shopping centres. They will be buzzing with noise, activities, and vibrancy to the extent that those who are still nostalgic about quiet libraries might need to resort to a bushwalk instead. The 'shooshing' philosophy is, I hope, gradually disappearing and those libraries that still enforce such nonsense laws should take a long hard look at how their patrons interact and learn in their information centres.

Information today does not have to be in libraries anymore. It can be held on remote servers enabling information to bypass libraries altogether. Library staff have to make sure that they maximise the use of the library facilities in order to provide environments conducive to learning, in whatever way that might be defined by future learners. In other words, give the people what they want! After all, libraries only exist because they have patrons/users/clients that use their facilities, products, and services.

Coordinating events and workshops to achieve information and technology literacy among the users is one of the many important roles that librarians will need to take on in the future. No doubt such tasks are being acted upon already, but I believe they will become an increasingly larger element of the LIS professional role.

Lastly, in my dream, the L word is no longer used. The word 'library' actually comes from the Latin word libre or libri meaning book. I suppose back in the dark ages, it only seemed natural to call a room full of books a library. But in the future, how will knowledge be stored? Perhaps it could be a microchip easily inserted into our bodies, and instantly imbuing us with all sorts of knowledge, ranging from how to bake wonderful meringues to building an aircraft carrier. It sounds farfetched, but the book as a source of knowledge now has to share its place with a number of other media, which will only increase as time goes on. In my dream, libraries of the future will be called: Scientias – the Latin word for learn and acquiring knowledge; and librarians will be known as Scientists – facilitators of knowledge. This is worth pursuing – don't you think?

Karina Tumon
Chair, Marketing Committee
NLS6 Coordinator
New Grads Group (Tasmania)
karina.tumon@gmail.com

Partnering with the Profession

- 20+ years experience in Information Management
- Employment Consulting & Library Technical Services
- Local, State & Federal Government endorsed supplier

Zenith is a specialist agency offering Employment Consulting and Library Technical Services to the Library, Records, Archives and Information Management industries. Zenith serves clients across all sectors from public libraries and government departments to education, large corporate and not-for-profit organisations.

With offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Canberra, and as a member of Careers MultiList, with over 90 affiliate partners around Australia, Zenith can offer a wider range of employment and technical services than other agencies within the Information Management sector.

As a partner we recognise you as a dynamic and creative market leader who appreciates emerging technologies and the impact a highly capable and motivated team can have.

A successful partnership with Zenith is assured as like us, you:

- embrace change and demonstrate a flexible approach to influencing stakeholders
- have a customer centric perspective which is evident across all business initiatives
- are keen to accept constructive input from experienced industry partners.

Please call John Cooksey, General Manager - Employment Services or Julie Daw, General Manager - Library Technical Services on 1300 852 555.

www.zenmgt.com

ZENITH
INFORMATION MANAGEMENT SERVICES

Franchise Partner of CareersMultiList.com.au

NEW LIBRARIANS' SYMPOSIUM 6
BRISBANE - 10 AND 11 FEBRUARY, 2013

BE DIFFERENT

